SIGNATURE CHOPS

The "chop", a hallmark of British Colonial cuisine, was born from the ingenuity of Hainanese immigrants in 19th-century Southeast Asia. Latecomers to British Malaya and Singapore, the Hainanese found work as cooks in colonial households and establishments, mastering Western cooking techniques. They transformed classic roasts and fried meats into local staples by adding bold sauces, such as Worcestershire-infused gravy, and pairing them with familiar sides like potatoes or rice. Over time, "chop" dishes evolved, blending Eastern and Western flavours, and became a symbol of culinary fusion, creativity, and resilience.
